Opposed to Them All.

On behalf of the Liquur Dealers' Association Mr. Kelley argued against the entire set of amendments proposed. He advanced particular objection to the insertion of the jail penalty in the punishment for violation of the whiskey laws and the increase in the license tax. Referring to the fight over the Mann bill at the last session, Mr. Kelley declared that after long and careful consideration the jail penalty had been stricken out then. At that time, he sald, the Liquor Dealers' Association entered into a compact with the General Assembly to exercise its influence in securing a proper observance of the law.

"That compact, gentlennen," declared Mr. Kelley, "the Whiskey Dealers' Association has faithfully observed. In so far as it was humanly possible they have prevented violations of the laws. The violations are growing less and less each year and each day.

The problem is solving itself. There is at this time less reason than ever before to enact new and more stringent laws, and yet the attempt is being made. I do not think the genulemen asking for these changes will deny that they are approaching the matter with the assumption that anything that strikes at the whiskey traffic is good, whether it knocks down the reptable dealer and leaves the disreputable to ply his trade or not. If the laws are being violated anforce them for they can be enforced. If these gentlemen or any others have avidence of violations let them begin a prosecution and I will Join with them. But I ask you in all earnestness not to anot harders and more stringent laws when those already in affect are extraordinarily severe. The Whiskey Dealers' Association is doing what it can be upload the law. It is asking for no thanges, for no privileges, but it is projecting against an increase of the burdens. I repeat that the law is better abserved to-day than it ever was, and that there is no necessity for a change. We all know that some years ago the saloons of Ri

Tennessceans Step From Train on Trestle When Station Was Announced.

(By Associated Press.)

KNOXVILLE, TENN., February 21.—
The mangled remains of three white men were found to-day beneath a high trestle of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad leading to their bridge across the Tennessee River. Several hours later they were identified by C. B. Jones, of Scarboro, Tenn., as three young men who lived in his vicinity—William Dunnaway, William "Turpin, and James Gamble, All were unmarried. Dunnaway and Turpin were thirty, years of age and Gamble only sixteen. The theory advanced is that the men stepped from the train immediately after the station named had been called, while the train was standing on the trestle, which is fully eighty feethigh. Mr. Hopkins accused the Hungarian government of teaching anti-Americanism in this country. He quoted Herr Franz Kaltenbrunn, Councillor of the Ministry of the Interior of Austria, who recently visited Austrian Colonies in this country and urged them not to become Americanized and to be frugal, that they might soon return to their country, and also advocated no aid from the New York home to the Austrians except to those who remained Austrians. He also quoted Rev. Bela Lorick, a Hungarian priest officiating at Connelsville, Pa., to the same effect.

"The dissemination of such Patements with their evil effect confing, as they do, from the head of both State and Church, should not be tolerated in our land," declared Mr. Hopkins.
